SURGICAL OVERVIEW

BREAST AUGMENTATION

Breast augmentation is a procedure that can improve breast contour, shape and volume when hormone replacement therapy alone has proved insufficient for breast development. While hormone therapy can increase breast volume, many patients still seek to enhance the feminine shape and contour of their breasts to alleviate gender dysphoria, match gender identity to presentation, and support the well-being of the person.

Breast augmentation can take place at any point during your transition. However, it is the WPATH guideline as well as a requirement by most insurance carriers that patients will have been on hormone replacement therapy for at least one year prior to breast augmentation.

You will be evaluated by a plastic surgeon to determine if you qualify for this surgery. If you are a good candidate for surgery, you will try on breast implants to help you select the desired implant size. There are two types of implants: silicone gel-filled and saline-filled implants. Both types of implants have a silicone shell with the contents of the implant being silicone gel versus saline solution, respectively. Most patients select silicone gel implants, however both options are available. Breast implants come in many shapes and projections; you and your plastic surgeon will determine which type will be most appropriate for you at the time of the consultation.

It is important to bring an unpadded bra to your consultation to get a more accurate idea of the desired implant volume. It is important for there to be minimal padding as to not affect sizing. Please bring a tighter fitting shirt to see how the implant size looks in clothing.

Breast augmentation is done under general anesthesia. You will have one scar along the lower fold of each breast that will be about 2-3 inches long (infra-mammary fold). This scar will be covered in bandages when you wake up from surgery. You will also be fitted with a surgical bra during surgery that should remain in place until your follow up visit.

There are risks of breast augmentation surgery including but not limited to: infection, bleeding, delayed wound healing, need for further procedures/revisions that may not be covered by insurance, unfavorable scarring, pain, asymmetry, implant-related risks including leakage, implant rupture, rippling of implant, poor positioning of implant, capsular contracture, implant-associated lymphoma and others. The risks will be further explained in detail at the time of the consultation.

The current FDA recommendation is that all women with silicone breast implants get a screening MRI 3 years after initial placement of implants and every 2 years thereafter. Screening MRI's can detect silicone implant rupture. This breast imaging does NOT serve as a replacement for your annual mammogram; annual mammograms should be discussed with your primary care provider.

Any additional questions or concerns can be addressed at your consultation visit.
